

Programme Outcomes, Programme Specific Outcomes for PhD Course in Himalayan Studies

Programme Name: PhD

PROGRAMME OUTCOME

- The PhD candidates are expected to engage in socially relevant research having policy implications and dealing with larger concerns of social science research on the Himalaya
- It is desirable that PhD candidates inculcate the importance of multidisciplinary research in their research journey towards examining the Himalaya
- PhD candidates could be able to visualise significant research areas in the context of the Himalaya that may facilitate the society at large

PROGRAMME SPECIFIC OUTCOMES

- PhD candidates would be able to make a balance between research practices stemming from the different branches of social science while prioritising their own research on the Himalaya
- PhD candidates would not only be able to engage critically with the existing discourses but could develop their own argument and thesis on issues related to Himalayan Studies
- PhD candidates would be confident enough to carry forward their own research independently
- PhD candidates in Himalayan Studies are expected to contribute towards understanding the Himalaya in a transnational framework having the possibilities to enrich the policy perspectives of the Government to deal with neighbouring countries located within the Himalaya
- PhD candidates could engage with the strategic significance of the Himalaya and that might draw attention both at national and international levels